

Q Now, Mr. Mayor, how is it that you remember that all this happened on September 14, 1922? A. Well, weighing the fish was one thing, see. Now, of course, a man don't have to tell his private business. Now, on the Friday night after the fish was weighed my wife and I, through family affairs, we had some private business, see the idea? And Friday night we went and done what business we had to do, and we came back and we were not out very long, but after we done this private business we came in, went to bed, of course, as usual. Got up Saturday morning and was around town. Of course, I have a kind of system as the mayor of the town which I follow out. Probably on Monday I have a certain amount of different things to go through, see different committees, and on Tuesday I do the same. Sometimes a Wednesday I have something a little different to do, on Wednesday. Well, on a Thursday same way, same way on Friday and all. I was going to say this. It came up-- and Saturday morning, of course, the school bus does not run. I was around town where the water works was at the present time, around looking at all the streets, see the idea, which I do practically every day for something. Saturday noon I came home to dinner. I had been then up the head of the town and I came up the same as an ordinary day. In the afternoon I heard Mr. Stevens had got a tel-
